*T*ing-a-ling-a-ling!
"Here comes the Good Humor man," yelled Danny.
He slid down from the tree and grabbed his little sister's hand and off they ran to see the Good Humor man.

Tommy left his trains

and they ran down the street to see the Good Humor man.

and dogs left their bones.

Everybody was there to see the friendly Good Humor man in his little white truck.

"What flavor would you like?"
asked the Good Humor man.

"There are walnut whizzes,
And dairy dizzies,
Chocolate chips
And strawberry splits."

"There are lemonade licks
And syrupy sticks,
Raspberry rockets
And pineapple pockets.
And my special flavor for today
Is Fun Valley Smash:
Raspberry-strawberry-marshmallow mash."
Oh, my they did taste good.

The Good Humor man was just about to leave when along came little Johnny Slow-Poke with his fat puppy.

The Good Humor man gave him a pineapple pinnacle, and off he went, ting-a-ling-a-ling.

He stopped at George's Garage, so that all the hungry drivers on the highway could see him.

He stopped at Piney Crest Pond, and the hot little sailors (and their daddies) stopped to greet him.

He stopped at Cherry Tree Corner, and the busy road workers stopped for a cool ice cream.

Then he made a special stop at the cottage up on the hill. There lived old Granny Griggs and her small grandson Dick, who had just come to stay.

"I want an extra-special treat for Dick," said Granny Griggs. "I don't know any children, and I'm afraid he finds it a bit lonely up here."

The Good Humor man gave Dick a friendly flakey frostee and went on his way, ting-a-ling-a-ling.

"It's been a long, hot day," thought the Good Humor man, as he drove through the peppermint gates of Fun Valley.

It is there, you know, that ice creams are made, and it's there that all the little white trucks live.

The next day, ting-a-ling-a-ling, the Good Humor man made his rounds again. Along came Danny and Tommy and Dinah and Katie and Bobby and all the mothers and daddies.

The Good Humor man was just about to leave—but where was Johnny Slow-Poke? There he was, and he was crying.

“I’ve lost my puppy!” wailed Johnny.

The Good Humor man shook his head sadly and handed Johnny a comforting coconut cone.

and Piney Crest Pond
and Cherry Tree Corner.

Then he went to the cottage on the hill, ting-a-ling-a-ling.

"Look, look, I've found a puppy!" yelled Dick.

"Why, Dick, that's Johnny Slow-Poke's puppy," said the Good Humor man. "He will be glad it's found!"

The Good Humor man told them where Johnny lived, and Dick and Granny Griggs set out to find him.

And the Good Humor man went on his way, ting-a-ling-a-ling, back to Fun Valley.

The next day, when all the children and mothers and daddies had got their ice cream and the Good Humor man was just about to drive away, who should come along but little Johnny Slow-Poke and his fat puppy.

And right beside them was little Dick Griggs!

“Look, I’ve found my puppy!” said Johnny.

“And look, I’ve found a friend!” said Dick.

“Oh my,” said the Good Humor man. “Today you’ll need something very good:

“There are peppermint pearls and wonderful whirls, Tangerine treats and nutty nougat neats. And my special flavor today is Fun Valley Flip: Butterscotch-apricot-coconut chip.”

And as the Good Humor man drove off that afternoon he gave an extra-specially happy ting-a-ling a-ling on his bell.
